Abstract

RESOURCE addresses a major innovation in EU and Italian law by exploring cooperative and participatory models for public services, especially social services of general interest. It seeks to shift from market-driven frameworks to pluralistic, community-based management that involves end-users and workers in decision-making. Using an interdisciplinary approach combining law and sociology, RESOURCE will analyze Italian case studies to develop legal contract templates and scalable solutions supporting local municipalities. The project aims to provide new socio-legal foundations for resilient, cooperative public service ecosystems and foster their adoption through pilot tests, education, and broad dissemination.
