Abstract

The project stems from the debate on the reform of legal education, aiming to rethink teaching methods for training jurists in the digital era. Grounded in the framework of a new "technological humanism," it analyzes the limitations of traditional legal teaching and explores more inclusive models by integrating digital tools, interactive techniques, and immersive learning. Through empirical research and clinical legal methods, it promotes active student engagement and social inclusion. The project aligns with Italy's PNRR Missions 1 and 4 and supports the University's Third Mission goals.
